Dear

b6
b7C

Thank you for your correspondence regarding the 1985 farm bill.

As you probably know, Senate floor debate on the farm bill has been going on since last Friday. I am the Democratic floor manager of this debate and you may be sure,  that I am aware of the seriousness of the condition of the farm economy. Many amendments will be offered during floor debate, some weakening and some strengthening the farm bill reported by the Senate Agriculture Committee. Whatever the case, you may be certain that I will be conscious of farmers' critical need for fair prices.

However, you must realize that I am one senator in one-hundred. The 1985 farm bill will be the result of many hours of compromise and negotiation and whether you and I like it or not, the farm coalition in the Senate is going to have to reconcile differences with many opposing interests.

I certainly hope that the 1985 farm bill will help alleviate the problems of our nation's farmers. But we have a long way to travel through the tunnel before we see the light on this bill. You may be certain that I have our farmers' best interests at heart as debate continues.

With best wishes,

Sincerely,

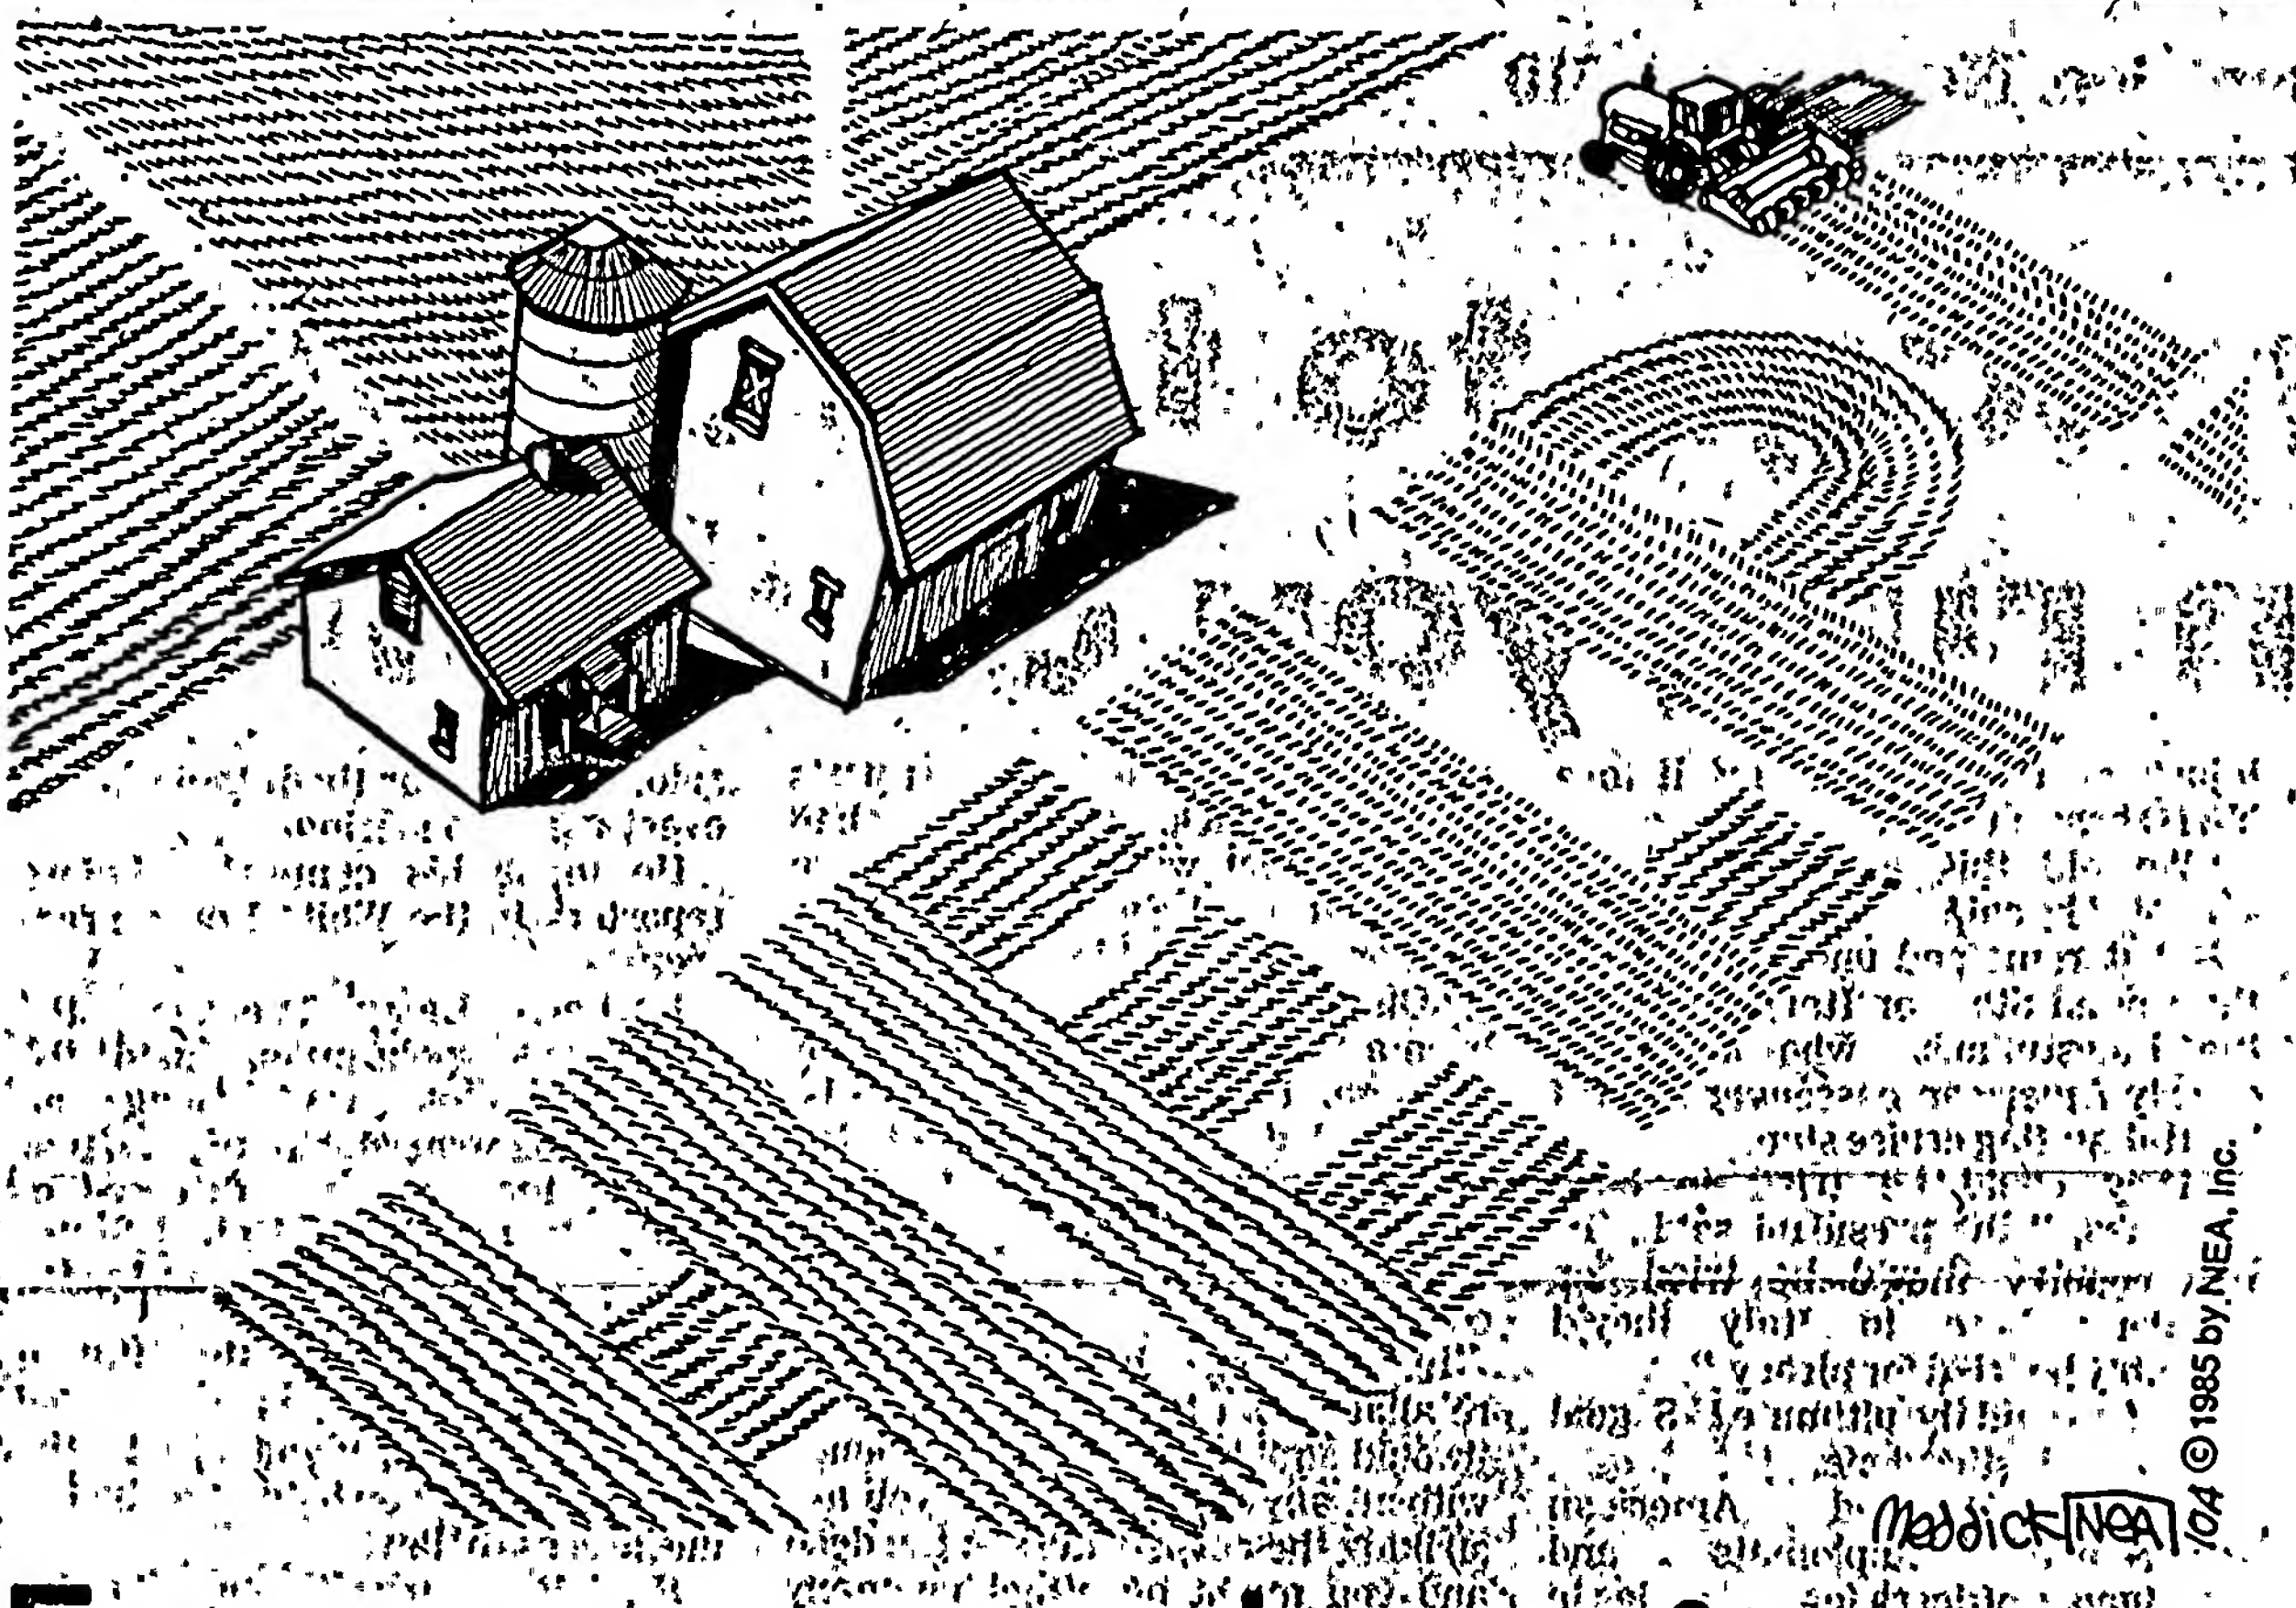

Edward Zorinsky
United States Senator

Farmers need profits

By Alan L. Thober

Rural Route 2, Beatrice

Both the Senate and the House committees have now passed their version of the 1985 Farm Bill. It is painfully obvious that neither consider the farm crisis as being a serious threat to our overall economy.

Many agri-businessmen, this administration and some organizations professing to represent farmers opt for a market-oriented program that would remove loan rates as the stabilizing influence on grain prices. They contend that agriculture has the strength to fend for itself against non-structured world markets.

Most farm organizations and certainly the majority of farmers say that since agriculture has a tremendous capacity for overproduction and has no bargaining position by itself, it needs the influence of the government to set a fair price and exercise control over production. These two opposing viewpoints send a very mixed signal to the congressional representatives.

The only major agreement by both factions is that government price supports do set the price for products, both domestically and on the world market. The administration says that price is too high. It makes our products non-competitive on the world market. Farmers contend that price is too low. It prices commodities below the cost of production. Members of Congress seem to lean toward a third option of continuing similar programs of the past. They say low loan rates and government-funded welfare subsistence called target prices would allow the consumer and the world to have inexpensive food.

Certainly there are questions about each position that must be answered. Are loan rates really too high to move production freely on world markets? There is much evidence to suggest that this is not true. In 1984 with world grain production nearing an all-time high and the value of the dollar reaching near record height we exported more grain than in the good year of 1979. Russia has and continues to purchase grain from the United States at record levels.

How important are exports to the farmers of this nation? In terms of production they are very important. Exports account for nearly half of our wheat sales and a third of our feed grain production. In terms of net farm income they are of no importance at all. In terms of a means to raise farm income they are also of little importance unless we have a drastic change in marketing strategy. In the past 25 years we can find only three, that market prices were forced above our cost of production by world demand. If we are serious at all about raising agricultural income, if we truly want a good farm program, perhaps now is way past time that we recognize that the world-wide shortage of grain in the 70s was a phenomenon that is not likely to be repeated in our lifetime.

Even the most ardent supporters of export programs freely advocate lowering prices from present levels; added evidence of the futility of looking to world markets as a solution. Are our grain prices really too low as the majority of farmers contend? Thousands of farmers have been forced into bankruptcy. More than a hundred private agricultural lending institutions have closed their doors. The entire Farm Credit System is insolvent and begging for a multi-billion dollar infusion from the federal government. State and local entities are suffering from a short-fall in revenue.

In total there is more than 217 billions of dollars in farm debt; adequate evidence of insufficient income to this nation's largest industry. Some point out that there have been inefficiencies that were a contributing factor. Certainly land banks and PCAs had too many lending officers. They financed operations that directly competed with farmer interests. They encouraged over-expansion. Private banks got caught in a situation of competition. Farmers spent too much, expended too much. State and local governments committed resources beyond agriculture's ability to pay.

Guest editorial

History may treat this time of crisis with kindness if those of us involved have learned a little bit about prudence. The human sacrifice involved may not have been in vain if the American people will just understand that the success of this nation lies very close to its soil. The cause of the farm crisis is very simplistic and so is its solution. Perhaps that is why it seems to escape the minds of the Congress. During the inflationary period of the 70s farmers saw their input costs double and in some cases triple. This was not a cause for alarm at that particular time because land values were increasing and extreme world demand led to periods of high commodity prices. Farmer net worth reached an all-time high.

When world demand abated, farm prices fell far below the inflated cost of production. When it was evident that those prices could not sustain payments on the escalated price of land it too began a dramatic decline that has yet to be stopped. Some blame the embargo by then-President Carter for the decline in farm prices. It is interesting to note that the embargo was placed in effect January 3, 1980. Unprecedented world demand continued unabated until November 1981. More logically and with historic precedence the wildly fluctuating product prices simply sought their only stabilizing influence, as they always have, and found it, as they always have in the loan rate as established by our federal government. The only real reasonable conclusion is that the farm crisis could not and would not have occurred had the Carter or Reagan administrations simply adjusted loan rates to the increased costs of production. Proof lies in the dramatic decline of food costs in the consumer dollar over the exact same period of time.

These same low grain prices have had an equally devastating effect on our livestock industry. Packers and corporate style feed lots have unfair advantage in being able to buy feed grains at less than the farmer's cost of production. They can lock in prices that are profitable for them but at great expense to the cattle and feed grain producer alike. Only when feed grain prices are above the cost of production can farmer-feeders regain their rightful competitive advantage. Only then can the true force of supply and demand regulate our cattle industry. Only then can the entire farm credit system regain its solvency.

Russia has proven that non-private ownership of land does not work. China has shown that the capitalistic system of rewards does. The system of low prices has worked for the consumer and it has worked for the Russians. It has not worked for the farmers and it has not worked for our government. The farmers of this nation have done a very poor job in gaining the understanding of the Congress that agriculture needs a profit. That, my friends, is the crux of the entire problem.

Zorinsky's grain price record questioned

Beatrice, Neb.

In spite of Sen. Zorinsky's contention (Today's Mail, Nov. 13) that he favors higher feed grain prices he is clearly on record in both other news media and in private letter of being in opposition to higher loan rates. My most serious contention with the senator lies in his apparent support of packer and huge corporation feedlots that drive the farmer-feeder out of business and bankrupt the cow-calf industry.

The senator's support of maintaining low feed grain prices allows these huge feedlots to buy grain far below the farmers' cost of production. They in turn lock in prices that are profitable for them but at the expense of the cattle and feed grain producer. Only when feed grains are priced above the cost of production can the farmer feeder be competitive. Only then can the true forces of supply and demand regulate our cattle industry. Only then can the entire Farm Credit System regain its solvency.

The letter preceding the senator's from Mrs. Wilson Howe clearly indicates agriculture's disgust with the ranking minority leader's failure to bring forth a program that would offer an opportunity for profit. It is interesting to note that Sen. Zorinsky was the very first to communicate with the president urging a federal bailout of the Farm Credit System.

Finally the senator loves to point out in defense of his clear position of maintaining low prices that he is co-sponsor of the Harkin bill which embraces the mandatory concept and

I think the senator is confused and that may be part of the problem.

ALAN THOBER
Governor raise attacked

Lincoln, Neb.

Gov. Kerrey says he wants to balance the budget. And then he wants a $25,000 raise for the governor. We are letting most of our money go to Iowa for the lottery. I bet they will be able to balance their budget in a couple of years and here in the state of Nebraska we will be looking to see what we can raise in taxes to balance the budget.

As a 100 percent disabled veteran the government is paying Kerrey almost $1,400 a month. And then he wants a raise from the people of Nebraska. I am a disabled veteran with bad legs, heart trouble and black lung from working in the coal mines and all they give me is 50 percent and I cannot get any more disability as many times as I tried from the Veterans Administration. So he should take a cut in his salary.

Why don't we just get a state lottery. It will help a lot of people, the disabled, senior citizens and the poor people who can't pay their light and gas bills and bus service and water bills.

I know Helen Boosalis would be a great governor of Nebraska. She would control the state budget. I would work very hard for her if she would run.

ANDREW J. MILLER
Editor's Note: Gov. Bob Kerrey's request for an increase in the governor's salary would benefit his successor, not himself, since he will not be running for re-election and the raise would not be effective until the end of his term.

Christians seek love

Lincoln, Neb.

I am amazed that so many people so easily swallow lies, garbage, myths and distortions the media have thrown the public about Christians. What is the truth about believers in Jesus Christ?

Christians are not ayatollahs. They seek neither inquisitions nor religious wars. Believers in Jesus Christ desire to share his rescuing love with a world heading toward self-destruction. Each person has the freedom to choose life or death. Christians respect that freedom, but would like all people to choose life.

Christians do not wish to nuke the Soviet Union or anyone else. They do not believe in destroying those who disagree, but in winning them over by showing the reality of Jesus Christ's love and forgiveness.

Separation of church and state may be in the Soviet constitution, but it is not in ours. Our Constitution guarantees freedom of religion, not government-enforced freedom from religion. No constitutional mandate limits Christianity to the four walls of a church building on Sunday morning.

Christians are not ignoramuses. An objective study of the universe, free from humanistic preconceptions, leads a person to faith in God. Too many "educated" people are still prisoners of the dogmas of the Enlightenment. God seeks to free our minds, not enslave them.

I challenge people who have been deluded by secular media myths to throw away their copies of "Elmer Gantry," turn off the television stereotypes of Christians and take off their blinders. They will find Christians to be imperfect people who are dedicated to bringing love and healing to hurting people in a dying world. At the nearest church or fellowship, anyone will find that a beautiful reality can come into their lives.

Wrestling With Competitiveness

As a holder of almost $30,000 in accounts payable from farmers, and a seed and fertilizer retailer for 27 years, I can tell you that your position that farmers must lower their prices to market clearing levels is incorrect and irresponsible journalism [UPFRONT, DESPERATELY SEEKING A SOLUTION, September/October].

The American farmer may well be feeding 79 other people, but his earnings do not allow him to pay his fertilizer bill. I would much rather cut my sales in half and receive full payment than to continue with normal sales, and only get paid for half.

It's time the fertilizer industry recognize that if we are to remain a viable part of the agricultural service sector, farmers must profit first. Market clearing levels are really farmer clearing, and put small businesses in a position of insolvency. If farmers are to sell grain for half the cost of production, then the fertilizer industry should do the same. Neither you nor I could remain in business without a profit; so why advocate profitless farming?

The low price concept you embrace has already forced thousands of good hard-working farmers off the land, bankrupted more than 100 rural lending institutions, and placed the entire Farm Credit System in a position of insolvency. American agriculture is suffering from lack of profit — not lack of exports. In fact, had Carol Brookins extended her graph, it would have shown that the United States exported more grain in 1984 than in 1979. There is little relationship between exports and profits.

Alan L. Thober
Thober Sheep Co.
Beatrice, Neb.

Ms. Brookins responds:

Certainly farmers must profit if the fertilizer industry is to remain a viable part of the agricultural service sector. However, the only way for farmers to "profit" is through the marketplace. American agriculture's dismal state is due to a major decline in what had been a growing world market for U.S. farm products. This has been caused by a price support structure that provides income without any regard for producers' ability to sell their output in the commercial market. United States wheat and coarse grain exports have fallen 26 million metric tons in just the past four years, or down more than 10 percent as a share of total world trade. This is down 15 percent from the high in 1979-80.

During this same period, U.S. taxpayers' cost for farm programs has soared to more than $55 billion. A continuation of our current programs will further weaken the agricultural sector. If we were, as Mr. Thober suggests, to adopt a program of even greater supply controls and higher government price guarantees, we would have to further cut production, and this would lead to lower sales. The cycle would then escalate. Foreign competitors would further increase their own production as we withdrew from the world market. With nearly 40 percent of our output moving to overseas markets, we have no choice but to become competitive.

Agriculture and the American farmer are going through a serious crisis. However, this crisis has been encouraged by policies that shield farmers from markets. The issue is not whether the American government should continue to provide massive direct subsidies to support the American farmer. This is a political and economic fact. But, we must separate "income support" for farmers from market prices if we want to get back in business. There is no other sector of the U.S. economy — including the fertilizer industry — in which the federal government sets a minimum price guarantee, and is the ultimate buyer for surplus production.

American farmers have met world competitors successfully in the past, and can do so again if they use their resources wisely. I believe that most U.S. farmers would choose policies to give them access to expanding markets, rather than retreat behind a high wall of artificial government programs.

Senator Edward Zorinsky
Sr 443 Russell Senate Office Bldg.
Washington D.C. 20510

December 12, 1985

Dear Senator Ed

I was very pleased to receive a copy of the letter of support from Senator Harkin. It is important for me that you know that my recent and continued criticism is in no way directed at you personally but rather confined to what most farmers would consider a very dismal performance.

Most weeks I have the privilege of communicating with relatively large numbers of farmers and businessmen. Until a month ago I always made it a point to mention that we were extremely fortunate to have Senator Zorinsky as ranking minority member of the Ag committee.

It is my hope that you can accept this criticism and understand that it comes directly from the farmers perspective.

Not being a Senator I am certain that there is a great deal that I do not understand. Therefore the following statements may very well be unfair. Non the less considering your position it appears one or all of the following may apply as to your total failure to bring about even the slightest improvement in farm programs. Senator Zorinsky is not aware that there exists a serious farm crisis. Senator Zorinsky is aware of the farm crisis but does not know the cause. Senator Zorinsky fully understands the crisis and its cause but is under obligations to outside sources so critical that the sacrifice of many family farmers is of minor importance. Senator Zorinsky understands and is free to support Nebraskas farmers but lacks the ability to communicate with his piers.

Now its important for you to understand my perspective. I understand why Mr. Spilker killed himself. I understand why the banker in Iowa was shot. I will have no difficulty in understanding the killing of a senator, the etc. I understand the bankruptcys of many of my familys lifelong friends. I understand the farm sales and the for sale signs that embrace Nebraskas farmland.

I understand farm related stress and the need of counseling.
I fully understand heart attacks and boy am I ever aware of the pain.

I do not understand grown up men who are paid high governmental salaries and are elected because of a reasonable amount of intelligence spending hours long into the night argueing over such minor matters as whether we are going to freeze farm prices for two or three years.

I do not understand a Senator who failed to raise farm income even one small dollar, sponsoring a bill to bail out the farm credit system with taxpayers money, while knowing full well it can never be paid back.

This year will soon pass. The non productive farm bill of 85, breeds discontent that will be born in 86. The offspring will be more farm failures, bank insolvancys, killings, suicides, divorces and perhaps even agri-cide.

If I could be granted one wish for the new year it would be that all of us involved in the agri-industry recognise the meaning of interdependence.
Thus far we have witnessed only the very small beginning of what some would call a crisis.

The Congress of 86 will have to deal with surplus grains that exceed the total supply available in pre-pik 83. It must deal with farm income that has reached an all time low. I can only hope that this time it will act with intelligence and integrity.

Sincerely

The questioned typewriting on Q1 through Q3 was determined to have horizontal spacing of 10 characters per inch. The style and size of type most closely corresponds to Laboratory standards for a type style manufactured by IBM. This type style may also be found on other brand name typewriters.

Specimens Q2 and Q3 contained the watermark "HAMMERMILL BOND MADE IN USA" which is manufactured by Hammermill Papers Group, Division of Hammermill Paper Company, 1540 E. Lake Road (Post Office Box 1440), Erie, Pennsylvania 16533. No indented writing or other physical characteristics were observed on Q1 through Q3 which would further assist in determining their immediate origin.

The results of the requested psycholinguistic and latent fingerprint examinations and the disposition of the submitted evidence will be the subject of separate reports. Photographs are retained.
